

Loewy Foods Marks Fifth Generation of Family Leadership, Expands Corporate Gifting Nationwide

Chicago, IL — September 17, 2025 —Loewy Foods, a fifth-generation family-owned and operated distributor of premium holiday gifts, today announced the continuation of family leadership as cousins Judd Loewenstein and Alex Loewenstein assume responsibility for guiding the company forward. Specializing in turkeys, hams, and curated specialty food items, Loewy Foods has long been trusted by companies and communities alike for its holiday gifting programs.

The tradition began in 1894, when Loewenstein Poultry started serving families and businesses across Detroit. In 1984, the family expanded operations to Chicago, where Loewy Foods was established to meet the growing demand for corporate gifting. Today, the company serves a broad spectrum of customers, from Fortune 100 companies and national enterprises to local businesses, unions, hospitals, dealerships, and law firms. Loewy Foods also supports nonprofits, churches, and community groups that use food gifts for holiday drives, school programs, and employee recognition events, underscoring its role in helping organizations of every size show appreciation and give back.

This transition reflects more than succession. It demonstrates how a family business with 130 years of history adapts to modern expectations while holding fast to the principles that have sustained it: honesty, fairness, reliability, and service. As the 2025 holiday season approaches, Loewy Foods is preparing for one of its busiest times of year, delivering holiday gifts that help organizations express gratitude and bring people together.

"Our family has always believed that bringing people together around the table creates lasting connections," said Judd Loewenstein. "We are committed to carrying that tradition forward while using new tools to make the experience simpler, faster, and more dependable for the companies we serve."

"The Loewenstein family has always been about relationships," said Alex Loewenstein. "We are focused on preserving the service our customers value while building the systems that will sustain the business for decades to come. This is about honoring where we come from and ensuring the next generation can rely on us the same way.

For Mark Loewenstein, who has led the company for decades, the transition is a moment of pride. "This business has always been about family and the values my father, grandfather, and great-grandfather instilled when they started the company and grew it," Mark said. "Seeing Judd and Alex step into leadership ensures those values will continue to define Loewy Foods. They respect the past and are ready to position the company for the future."
